in the Hampton Roads fight the Monitor drove the Merrimac back to her moorcelebrated apple-tree of Appointation" not that he fails to understand our attitude towards northern men who settle amongst us; not that he omits to do justice to the romantic history and wonderful natural resources of the old Commonwealth; not that he urges us to settle up our debt question and calls it a "disgraceful episode." With respect to these topics his views are not our views; but no matter now. It is of noticeable consequence, however, that he should say:

I have seen no place in the world where the colored race was treated so kindly and so well as in Virgima in regard to everything except voting. There is no doubt but that in places where the colored vote is in the majority, by all ways and means in their power the white people have overcome that majority. They have carried the elections just as they are carried everywhere else, I am sorry to eay, and either by fair or foul means precented the negrous securing control. While it is wrong and in the end will produce its punishment, who is there to throw the first stone?

Such is not the fact. Mr. Isoallas is mis-tions, influential manufacturers and miners in other States often manage by hook o erook to have their workmen support whatever ticket they please?

In Virginia, however, the colored man stands side by side with his employer at the polls, and while the latter drops in a Democratic the former drops in a Repub hean ticket. Is the darky badgered or bullied or discharged for so doing? No. Such instances are rare,

Take the election statistics of Virginia for ten years past and we warrant it will be found that the percentage of negroes who exercised the right of suffrage was as large if not larger than of whites. That we have had squabbles and some times excesses at the polls can no more be denied than that there have been like experiences in Ohio and Massachusetts, but the Republican press magnifies every such occurrence in the South as an outrage, as attempt to disfranchise the negro, where as in the North and West such trouble are frested as the natural ebullitions of people who are heated by political strife. No. Virginia has been very patient with her colored citizens and Mr. INGALLS seems to recognize this fact dimly when he says: "While it is wrong [to suppress the negro vote] and in the end will produce its own punishment who is there to throw the first

He is of the opinion that an educational qualification would be a good solution of our political difficulties in Virginia, but having been told that it would not be adopted if submitted (as it must be) to a popular vote, he looks forward to the day when by acquisition of new settlers the whites of Virginia will have such a preponderance of population as to remove the menace of negro suffrage. He thinks the moment this takes place the temptation for the demagogue to use the colored vote will be done away with, "and the negro will be left like others to consider his own interests and take the advice of his own friends, and his vote will divide. In this way I hope to see the color line disappear." So do we, but mean while we cannot ad-So do we, but mean while we cannot admit, nor agree to hear without very positively dissenting, that "either by fair or foul means" we have "prevented the negroes securing control." The means we use are lawful and proper, and the results are advantageous both to the whites and blacks; therefore are not "foul."
